

THE CENTER FOR ARTS EDUCATION

The Career Development Program (CDP) at The Center for Arts Education will launch its fall semester next week. CDP places NYC high school students who show exceptional talent in the arts into semester-long internships in various arts-related businesses throughout the City's $21 billion arts industry. Many of these students make their homes under served communities and CDP helps to provide career preparation and economic independence for these students.

Starting next week, CAE will host several new initiatives to kick off the fall semester. These events feature panel sessions and presentations by some of the biggest names in the media industry. Space is limited at these events, but we invite you to come to learn more about CDP and hear from these panelists about the importance of arts-education training and career development.
